Kids these days! Reconsidering our conversations about Generation ME

The hallways of our health care institutions and the pages our health care journals echo with various versions of the refrain, “Kids these days...”. Concerns are being expressed about the next generation’s lack of professionalism, respect, commitment, and even ability to take feedback. While some concerns may be legitimate, it may also be the case that these generational differences are the most powerful forces of change in our professions. The goal of the session is to promote and enable productive conversations between generations about professional behaviours and values that will harness generational differences as positive forces for change.

PLENARY SPEAKER

Dr. Glenn Regehr

Associate Director, Research and Clinical Scientist at UBC’s Centre for Health Education Scholarship

MORNING WORKSHOP TOPICS:

- What is a “preceptor”, anyway? A learning safari through the lens of the UBC Family Practice Preceptor Role Description

  Dr. Brenda Hardie, Program Lead for Faculty Development

- Perturbed by Professionalism? What to do if unprofessional resident behaviours keep you up at night

  Dr. Peter Gee, Site Director and Site Faculty for Faculty Development

- Perhaps That Socrates Fellow Was Onto Something: Modernizing our use of questioning as a teaching approach

  Mr. Bill Upward, Teaching and Learning Strategist

AFTERNOON ACTIVITIES:

- Paddling
- Hiking
- Wine Tours
- Biking
- Preceptor appreciation dinner

Support for travel and accommodation available.